Galician ribeye on the kamado, direct sear

A one-kilo Galician ribeye, Maldon salt, embers at 350°C and not a thing more. The shortest recipe of the year and the hardest to mess up if you respect the timings.

TEMPERATURE

350 °C

Ingredients

- 1 kg Galician rubia ribeye (4-5 cm thick)
- 2 cda Maldon flaky salt
- 1 cda freshly ground black pepper
- 300 g Padrón peppers
- 2 cda extra-virgin olive oil
- c/n coarse salt for the peppers
- 1 ud probe thermometer (Inkbird, Meater or similar)

Method

1 TEMPER THE STEAK

Pull the ribeye out of the fridge 60 minutes before cooking and rest it uncovered on a wire rack at room temperature. This ensures the core is not cold when it hits the kamado and the cook stays even.

2 LIGHT THE KAMADO

Pack the firebowl to the rim, lower vent wide open, top vent three quarters. It takes 15-20 minutes to light the kamado and settle at 350°C. Do not load the meat until the gauge stops climbing.

3 SALT 15 MIN AHEAD

Fifteen minutes before cooking, sprinkle Maldon generously on both faces. The salt pulls surface moisture out and it then reabsorbs — the payoff is a drier, crunchier crust.

4 SEAR 4 MIN PER SIDE

Place the steak on the hot, clean grate. 4 minutes untouched. Rotate 90° if you want the crosshatch and flip. 4 more on the other side.

5 PROBE 50-52°C

Probe the thickest spot, away from the bone. 50°C is very rare, 52°C is rare. For medium-rare push to 55°C, but you give up part of what you paid for.

6 REST ON A RACK

Pull and rest 5 minutes on a wire rack (not a board). Carryover will lift the internal temperature another 2-3°C. Meanwhile, drop the peppers on the coals.

7 SLICE AND SERVE

Slice across the grain in thick pieces (~1.5 cm). Serve with the freshly salted Padrón peppers and a young Mencía. No table salt — the Maldon has done the job.

Editor's tips

- The grate must be genuinely hot and clean. If the steak sticks on contact, it was not ready — wait 2 more minutes.
- Without a probe this recipe is a gamble. A Meater Plus or an Inkbird IBT-2X changes your kamado life.
- Do not tent the meat with foil during the rest — the rack lets air circulate and keeps the crust crisp.
- For a subtle smoke note, throw one oak chip on the coals right before loading the steak. More wood masks the meat.
